

EXCLUSIVE! TERRY McMILLAN TELLS ALL ABOUT HER GAY EX

The Advocate

ESTABLISHED 1969

the gay & lesbian newsmagazine

Advocate
INTERVIEW

A SUPERSTAR COMES OUT

WNBA most valuable player Sheryl Swoopes unveils her life as a gay woman and mom

PLUS HOLIDAY GIFT GUIDE • NICK CARTER

PHOTOGRAPH BY CHRISTOPHER
MORRIS

Leaves of glass

Gay craftsmen Eric Markow and Thom Norris create unique works of art by weaving glass

Markow (left) and Norris (right) create unique works of art by weaving glass

“When we go to the store, it’s always the sales clerk who asks, ‘This one you want to buy?’” says Thom Norris, who works alongside his partner, Eric Markow, in Washington, D.C. “That’s why, then, if you want to spend $100 on a hand bowl, be the glass!”

Markow and Norris have used the partnership to create colorful work that has been widely covered in the press. “People think we’re just interested in the work,” says Norris. “But we’re proud to be part of an industry that’s been recognized for something we’ve been doing every day.” He says he has had the joy of getting into the work and being a “handing.”

That means, when they go to work, they’re not just glass people, but they’re also the people who are the most in the world. “We’re not just the people who are the most in the world,” says Norris. “We’re not just the people who are the most in the world.”

They’re not just the people who are the most in the world. “We’re not just the people who are the most in the world,” says Norris. “We’re not just the people who are the most in the world.”

Markow and Norris are the only people who are the most in the world. “We’re not just the people who are the most in the world,” says Norris. “We’re not just the people who are the most in the world.”